

ITACHI UCHIHA vs ESCANOR

COMPLETE MANGEKYŌ ♦ THE ONE – NOON

THE EYE THAT BENDS THE MIND AGAINST THE LION THAT BURNS THE SKY

ENGAGEMENT RULES

Cross-universe duel: no shared power scale between Naruto and The Seven Deadly Sins. Judgment stays strictly on demonstrated feats, with no chained scaling or tier conversion.

ITACHI UCHIHA – SNAPSHOT

The final battle against Sasuke. Complete Mangekyō Sharingan, body already ravaged by terminal illness.

ESCANOR – SNAPSHOT

Exact noon, standard one-minute form of The One — excluding The One: Ultimate, the sacrificial form reserved for the fight against the Demon King.

BATTLEFIELD	Neutral ground, under an open sky.
VICTORY CONDITION	Definitive incapacitation.

ITACHI UCHIHA

COMPLETE MANGEKYŌ

FORMER AKATSUKI

TERMINALLY ILL

THE FALLEN SHARINGAN GENIUS

A prodigy of the Uchiha clan and an ANBU captain at thirteen, Itachi carries the weight of a massacre he never justified publicly. His body, already ravaged by illness, gives him only a few minutes of combat at this level of power.

SIGNATURE ARSENAL

Susanoo & Mangekyō

Tsukuyomi (seventy-two hours of torment endured in a single glance), Amaterasu (inextinguishable black flames) and a spectral avatar wielding Yata no Kagami and the Totsuka no Tsurugi, which seals for eternity whatever it pierces.

VS

ESCANOR

THE ONE — NOON

SUNSHINE GRACE

SEVEN DEADLY SINS

THE LION OF PRIDE

Bearer of Sunshine, the Grace once held by the archangel Mael, Escanor's power follows the sun's course. Timid and frail at night, at exact noon he becomes a mass of muscle capable of subduing an opponent with a single gesture.

SIGNATURE ARSENAL

The One & Rhitta

Colossal heat stored through the sacred axe Rhitta, Cruel Sun and Divine Sword — but a power that consumes his own body and declines the moment the noon minute ends.

MATCHUP COMPARISON

CRITERION

ITACHI

ESCANOR

Raw physical strength

5

9

Escanor subdued Meliodas in Annihilation Mode with a single gesture; Itachi remains a shinobi weakened by illness.

Speed / reactions

8

8

Escanor is massively hypersonic, with no proof of relativistic speed. Itachi compensates through the Sharingan's predictive reading.

Endurance / durability

4

7

Itachi is dying, every Mangekyō technique exhausts him; Escanor endures far more, but his power consumes him too, with no active regeneration.

Tactical intelligence

10

5

Itachi planned his own death years in advance; Escanor at noon is direct, arrogant, never devious.

Mental resistance

6

8

Escanor has already resisted Gowther's Invasion and Melascula's soul manipulation; Itachi himself has never been tested against a comparable external intrusion.

Hax / lethality

9

7

Totsuka, Tsukuyomi and Amaterasu are devastating but uncertain in execution; Cruel Sun and Divine Sword are more direct, but reliable.

Autonomy / duration

4

5

Itachi exhausts himself fast between Mangekyō and illness; The One lasts only one minute before progressively declining.

ITACHI WINS IF HE LANDS HIS GAZE ON THE FIRST ATTEMPT.

— the asymmetry fits in one line —

ESCANOR WINS BY SIMPLY REFUSING TO FALL.

ITACHI

46

ESCANOR

49

46 against 49, or 48.4% / 51.6% — a real but measured advantage, carried mainly by Escanor's mental resistance and Itachi's limited operating time.

THE CENTRAL ARGUMENT: TSUKUYOMI AGAINST A TESTED DEFENSE

On paper, Tsukuyomi should end the fight in one glance: a genjutsu that inflicts seventy-two hours of mental torture in a fraction of a second, whose power renders ordinary dispelling methods useless. It is the angle any duelist would pick first.

But Escanor is no stranger to mental attack. The Seven Deadly Sins canon shows him resisting Gowther's Invasion — the closest thing to a genjutsu his universe possesses — as well as Melascula's soul manipulation, whose attack turned back against her. Only one technique ever managed to put him to sleep, and only once amplified by Merlin's magic.

And even within his own universe, Tsukuyomi has never been strictly absolute: Itachi himself admits it can only be broken by force by a Sharingan of the same blood — something Sasuke once demonstrated. A genjutsu with an already-known crack in its own creator is no longer an automatic win button.

CANON NUANCES

USE CONDITION

THE TOTSUKA STILL HAS TO CONNECT

The Sword of Totsuka seals for eternity whatever it pierces — in theory, even a divinity. But in practice it is a blade like any other: limited reach, a trajectory that can be dodged. Facing an Escanor capable of subduing an opponent of Meliodas's caliber with a single gesture, the obstacle isn't the blade's nature — it's landing it before the exchange turns to the Lion's advantage.

MAJOR GRAY AREA

AMATERASU AGAINST A BODY THAT IS ITSELF A SUN

The black flames burn everything they touch for seven days, with no heat source known in Naruto able to extinguish them. But Escanor himself generates enough heat to melt blades at a distance: nothing proves a body of solar nature would resist flames of another category, nothing proves the opposite either. What remains is a scenario the gray zone opens rather than closes: a struck Escanor would probably keep fighting out of pure pride, refusing to admit defeat as long as The One hasn't worn off.

CANON PRECISION

AMATERASU DOESN'T NEED WHAT TSUKUYOMI NEEDS

This fiche's central tension is built around Tsukuyomi's demanding condition: Escanor has to look directly into Itachi's eyes for it to trigger. Amaterasu carries no such requirement. Canon is specific about the difference: Tsukuyomi needs direct eye contact with the target, while Amaterasu only needs Itachi to have the target within his own line of sight — no reciprocal gaze, nothing required from Escanor's side at all. That doesn't resolve the heat-resistance gray area above, but it means the black flames are a far easier card to attempt than the headline technique, available from the first exchange rather than gated behind a fragile eye-lock.

ITACHI'S CARD — AND ITS LIMIT

CLONES ARE A DIVERSION, NOT A SOLUTION TO THE GAZE

Itachi is a seasoned user of Kage Bunshin: saturating space, feinting a charge, forcing Escanor to split his attention are all perfectly canonical uses. What nothing confirms, however, is that a clone can trigger a Tsukuyomi in the original's place — the technique passes through Itachi's own eyes, and a clone dissolves at the first hit it takes. Kage Bunshin buy time and confusion; they don't buy the gaze.

THE HOURGLASS ON BOTH SIDES

Every Mangekyō activation brings Itachi closer to death; his body can hold out only a few minutes at this pace. The One, in turn, shuts off precisely at the end of the noon minute, after which Escanor's power progressively declines. Both fighters are racing against a clock.

The difference lies in its nature: Itachi's decline is a brutal, unpredictable collapse; Escanor's is a countdown he knows in advance, and can exploit down to the last second.

WHAT FAVORS ITACHI

- ▶ Three finishing cards: Tsukuyomi, Amaterasu and the Totsuka, which seals for eternity.
- ▶ The highest tactical intelligence on the table — he planned his own death years in advance.
- ▶ The Kage Bunshin buy time and confusion to create the opening.

WHAT FAVORS ESCANOR

- ▶ A demonstrated mental resistance track record against the most dangerous intrusion in his own universe.
- ▶ The highest raw strength on the table, able to subdue an opponent with one gesture.
- ▶ His clock is a countdown he knows; Itachi's is an unpredictable collapse.

I PROBABLE COMBAT SCENARIO

- 01 The opening. Escanor enters The One in full daylight. Itachi activates his Mangekyō, deploys his first Kage Bunshin as a screen and keeps his distance, looking for an angle for Tsukuyomi without exposing himself to a frontal exchange.
- 02 The test. Escanor charges, Rhitta in hand, crossing through the clones without telling them from the original. Itachi evades behind Susanoo and attempts Amaterasu from range — the question of Escanor's heat resistance stays without an immediate answer.
- 03 The gaze. Taking advantage of a clone's feint, Itachi finally catches Escanor's gaze and triggers Tsukuyomi. Carried by his mental resistance, Escanor staggers but doesn't collapse instantly — the window closes faster than expected.
- 04 The narrow window. Seizing that fraction of a second of hesitation, Itachi tries to land the Totsuka. If it connects, the fight is sealed — literally. If it misses, Escanor's raw power takes back control.
- 05 The outcome. Once that single opening has passed, Itachi no longer has the resources to try again. Escanor, proud and still standing, closes the fight.

FINAL VERDICT

ESCANOR — 5.5/10 SCENARIOS

The table gives Escanor the edge without ever crushing Itachi (46 against 49 out of 70) — and that is exactly the spirit of this duel. Itachi does not lose for lack of tools: he loses because his true win condition, Tsukuyomi, rests on a wager that Escanor's canon has already partly denied, and that Itachi's own canon never presented as absolute.

A lion who has already withstood the most dangerous mental intrusion in his own universe is no longer the ideal genjutsu target, even an exceptional one — but the margin stays narrow, not crushing.

Nearly half the scenarios still belong to Itachi: the ones where the gaze lands before the charge, where the Totsuka connects in that fraction-of-a-second window, or where Amaterasu proves more devastating than a solar power can withstand. It is not an impassable wall for Konoha — it is a narrow door, and it has to open on the first try, because Escanor won't offer a second one.

OPEN DEBATE

If The One: Ultimate — the sacrificial form Escanor unleashes against the Demon King himself — were counted instead of stopping at the standard noon minute, would the gap become unplayable for Itachi? And if a third party could have warned him about Escanor's mental resistance beforehand, would Itachi have opened with a different card than Tsukuyomi?

No “he wins because he’s the hero.” No power borrowed from a character just because someone else beat them. When canon doesn’t settle it, the amber box says so — and the duel is decided elsewhere. That’s this book’s only promise, and it’s kept twenty times.
